Andrew Hubbuch's teaching philosophy is based on the belief that we are all stakeholders in public education; that we all play a role in ensuring the success of the students in our community. As a teacher, Mr. Hubbuch acknowledges his role is to provide the knowledge and skill sets necessary for his students to thrive in today's society.

Mr. Hubbuch's commitment to improving his practice is evident in his creative and original approaches to reaching his students. His child-centered approach has made him an effective inclusion teacher as he works to make standard lessons relevant to children with different learning styles. Differentiating instruction can be seen in his classroom in the form of collaborative activity centers or through thought provoking questions that provide students with an opportunity to reflect and respond. Mr. Hubbuch knows that accountability cannot always be defined in measured and analytical terms. He works everyday to create students with a "spark for learning" that they carry with them through fifth grade and beyond. That is why Ch'iarra Brown, Mr. Hubbuch's student says, "He wants us to reach for the stars and become successful."

"Mr. Hubbuch is a hard-working self-starter who possesses excellent classroom management and implements lessons geared toward all learning styles. He is an energetic and dedicated instructor who inspires both in and outside his classroom."
